

With its powerful structure, this charming Castle rises on a gentle hill, in the heart of the Chianti region, at a small distance from the border of the ancient Republic of Siena and Florence.

The building is set amid sun-kissed fields and vineyards, first belonged to the Benedictine monks.

Today the Castle still has its massive 15th century fortifications with an imposing cylindrical tower built as protection against artillery fire. But there is also the aristocratic grace of the villa, with its sequence of furnished and decorated rooms, and an unparalleled 18th century theatre.

The Castle welcomes visitors, tourists and nature lovers with its production of a vast range of natural products, which are made by combining ancient agricultural traditions and modern technology.
